What do you find more challenging in your day to day job?

A mixture of technical challenges (volume of data/ several projects progressing simultaneously) and "human" aspect in managing other people activities.

Do you think theory is more important than practice?

Generally speaking, I would say that a balance between the two would be ideal. On the other hand, however, there are either personal attitudes in the learning process or circumstances, areas in general where one would be more relevant than the other.
